Mobile furniture can transform under-used spaces into highly functional transitional huddles, training rooms and touchdown spaces. If you find that your conference room is rarely used for large meetings, this is a viable solution to expand it's usage.

Here are some questions to help you decide on a solution:

Conference over and out-of-town visitors gone? Turn the conference room into a training room by re-configuring your mobile tables. While you're at it, grab the mobile whiteboards, and audio/video cart if needed. What about wireless options?

Project complete and time for a celebration? Convert a bunch of freestanding mobile desks into lunch tables by turning them around and pushing them into one large table.

Need more places for people to sit? Grab your mobile, nesting chairs and roll them into place. When the meeting is over, roll and/or stack them away.

Gotta talk over an idea with a colleague? Invite her over and roll out your padded, upholstered mobile storage pedestal for her to sit on.

Have something or need a quick tutorial? Roll over a mobile white board screen and start brainstorming.

Hungry or thirsty guests? Roll in the mobile beverage cart to keep them happy.

Do you need to brainstorm some fresh ideas? Whatever the team size, you can turn separate mobile tables into small or large breakout groups, in all kinds of configurations.

Is there a Go-To-Meeting that your team all needs to see? Configure mobile tables in a "V" or a "U" for a screen view that keeps everyone in the loop on the information.

Whatever your need, once you incorporate mobile furnishings you'll never look back. For a fraction of the cost, you've created a many agile collaborative office environments.
